Sunrays During Fark Days. A shore time a ter the occurrence of the incidents narrated in my reminiscences of the war, which appeared in the GAZETTE of the 6 b, I had secured a canteen of fine o'd scuppernong wine, and when we haited for a few hours' rest in the middle of the day I placed it carefully under my head and fell off into a delightful dez. Upon awakening my first set was to take my canteen from under my head and take a good swig, when "mirabile diciu," my wine had turned to water. My expression of mingled disappoint ment and d sgust was greeted with roars of laughter from at least a score of officers and

They played me then a bitter p ank
When from my flask the wine they drank,
At length I played them one as frank,
For t me at last sets all things even.
And if we do but wait the hour

men who had patiently awaited my awak

might have a chance at them sooner or

There never yet was human power That could evade, if un orgiven, The patient search and vigil long, Of him who lost his scuppernong.

I was thus my opportunity occurred: One day an order came from the General for me to take a detail of a hundred men and cut a road through a neighboring swamp. While superintending the execu-tion of the order I happened to be standing was hanging in detatched sheets. I gave one of them a pull when down it tumbled, disclosing bundreds of large horned beetles or pinch bugs, as the children call them, that had been hybernating between the bark and the trunk. I took the large official envelope that con-

p. cket and proceeded to fill it with the huge bugs of which I managed to crowd in and secure about a hundred. Upon my return to camp the first object on which my eyes rested was orderly H., who I suspected of being the principal operator in changing my wine to water, lying asleep near his herse, which was saddled. Here then was my looked for opportunity. I opened the envelope and started a bug on an exploring expedition up each leg of his trousers. When these had disappeared I started two more, and had nearly released all my prisoners, when an order came for H. to mount and ride some two miles into the country for a pig the General had bought. He got up hastly rubbing his eyes and mounted his horse, but Gilpin-like quickly got down again and occupied himself with stamping a huge bestle into fragments. After riding a few hundred yards we saw him again dismount and go through the stamping opera-when he returned he had a scared expression in his eyes and said with great emphasis, "Well, this certain'y beate any place in the world for bugs and I do not care how soon we get orders to move. You saw me, didn't you, stamp a great big bug to death before I started," I told him I had. "Well," beid he, "I hate to tell it, for I hardly ex-pect to be believed, but may I never per-ceive if I didn't have to take off my pants, and I got 37 out of one leg and 39 out of the other of those great big bugs with horns as sharp as the old boy's, and, good gracious, how they can bite. Just look how one pinned me through the thumb." Then he carefully prepared against another invasion by taking some twine from his pockets and tying his pants tight around his ankles. There were many interesting occurrences that for want of space I must omit. Such as the experience of the bee bive detail and the adventures of the sergeant in command of the detail to arrest stragglers in Tarboro. Our recall from the old North State was much regretted by both officers and men. I recollect one of the latter telling me that it was the greatest country for eggs we had struck yet; that he had bought a dozen yesterday and seven were goose ergs, and it only took four to make a good-sized scramble for a man. If I have not already tired you I will relate one more practical joke played by E K. (who afterwards served his county in the Legislature) on a big conscript. We were in camp below the Howlet house, and the fire wood being some distance back of the lines it was a considerable job to carry a twenty-four hour supply to camp.

to carry a twenty four hour supply to camp.

E. K. was lying in his bunk one day when the big conscript J. came in and sat down by the fire. The commissary had been issuing black beans, of which F. K. was no fonder than he was of toting wood, and he had accumulated about a gallon of them. It occurred to him that now was an opportunity to make a trade; so he said: "J., if you will bring me two good shoulder turns of wood I will give you all my beans." "All right, Lish," he said: "I will do it." Before starting he said: "Lish, will you lend me your boiler to put on some to cook while I am gone?" Having obtained the loan of the boiler, he poured in some water and about a pint of the beans and putting it on the fire started for the wood.

Now the commissary had been issuing soap to wash the clothes, about the color and consistency of tar and of an extremely disagreeable odor. J.

wash the clothes, about the color and consistency of tar and of an extremely disagreeable odor. J. had hardly gotten out of hearing before K. slipped out of his bunk and put about a half pound of the soap in the beans; then getting back into his bunk pretended to be asleep. After a considerable time he heard J. coming with the wood, which he threw down, and upon opening the door cried out in great slarm, "Lish! Lish! look here, Lish!" K. raised up, looking at the fire-placa, and saw an immense stack of soapsuds reaching some three feet up the chiuncy above the biller. He merely said, "I believe those munt be dog beans the commissary has issued us." I got a plate and poured out some to cool, and after tasting them said, "Lish, you are certainly right; these are dog beans sure, for they taste exactly like a wet dog smells, and I will certainly inform the General on the commissary in the morning.
